

Mutual
Images

ISSUE 3

AUTUMN 2017

VISUALITY AND FICTIONALITY OF JAPAN AND
EUROPE IN CROSS-CULTURAL FRAMEWORK

MUTUAL IMAGES

ISSUE 3 – AUTUMN 2017

MUTUAL IMAGES

A TRANSCULTURAL RESEARCH JOURNAL

FOUNDED BY

AUORE YAMAGATA-MONTOYA, MAXIME DANESIN & MARCO PELLITTERI

---

Previously published issues

ISSUE 1 – Between Texts and Images: Mutual Images of Japan and Europe

ISSUE 2 – Japanese Pop Cultures in Europe Today: Economic Challenges, Mediated Notions, Future Opportunities

VISUALITY AND FICTIONALITY OF JAPAN AND
EUROPE IN CROSS-CULTURAL FRAMEWORK

EDITED BY

MARCO PELLITTERI & MATTEO FABBRETTI

Mutual
Images

MUTUAL IMAGES – ISSUE 3 – AUTUMN 2017

---

MUTUAL IMAGES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION

MUTUAL IMAGES

A TRANSCULTURAL RESEARCH JOURNAL

Mutual Images is a semiannual, double-blind peer-reviewed and transcultural research journal established in 2016 by the scholarly, non-profit and independent Mutual Images Research Association, officially registered under French law (Loi 1901).

Mutual Images' field of interest is the analysis and discussion of the ever-changing, multifaceted relations between Europe and Asia, and between specific European countries or regions and specific Asian countries or regions. A privileged area of investigation concerns the mutual cultural influences between Japan and other national or regional contexts, with a special emphasis on visual domains, media studies, the cultural and creative industries, and popular imagination at large.

Mutual Images is registered under the ISSN 2496-1868. This issue's Digital Object Identifier is: HTTPS://DOI.ORG/10.32926/3.

As an international journal, Mutual Images uses English as a lingua franca and strives for multi-, inter- and/or trans-disciplinary perspectives.

As an Open Access Journal, Mutual Images provides immediate open access to its content on the principle that making research freely available to the public supports a greater global exchange of knowledge.

© MUTUAL IMAGES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION

Mutual Images Journal by Mutual Images Research Association is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License.

DISCLAIMER ABOUT THE USE OF IMAGES IN OUR JOURNAL

Mutual Images is an academic journal: it is aimed to the scholarly analysis of ideas and facts related to literary, social, media-related, anthropological, and artistic phenomena in the Humanities. The authors of the journal avail themselves, for the contents of their contributions, of the right of citation and quotation, as in the Art. 10 of the Berne Convention and in the Title 17, § 107 of the Copyright Act (United States of America). The works hereby cited/quoted and the images reproduced—all of which include the mention of the creators and/or copyright owners—are aimed to validate a thesis, or constitute the premise for a confutation or discussion, or are part of an organised review, or anyway illustrate a scholarly discourse. The illustrations and photographs, in particular, are reproduced in low digital resolution and constitute specific and partial details of the original images. Therefore, they perform a merely suggestive function and fall in every respect within the fair use allowed by current international laws.

MUTUAL IMAGES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION: www.mutualimages.org

OPEN ACCESS JOURNAL: www.mutualimages-journal.org

CONTACT: mutualimages@gmail.com

---

MUTUAL IMAGES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION – Headquarters
1810 Route de la Champignière
42800 St Romain en Jarez – France

MUTUAL IMAGES

A TRANSCULTURAL RESEARCH JOURNAL

MAIN EDITOR

Marco PELLITTERI, Department of Sociology, Kōbe University (Japan)

JOURNAL MANAGERS

Maxime DANESIN, Cultural and Discursive Interactions Research Unit, Modern Literature Department, François-Rabelais University (France)

Aurore YAMAGATA-MONTOYA, School of Creative Arts, University of the West of England (UK)

EDITORIAL BOARD

Matteo FABBRETTI, School of Modern Languages, Cardiff University (UK); Pascal LEFÈVRE, LUCA School of Arts, Campus Sint-Lukas Brussels (Belgium); MIYAKE Toshio, Department of Asian and North African Studies, Università Ca' Foscari di Venezia (Italy); Fabio Domenico PALUMBO, Department of Ancient and Modern Civilizations, University of Messina (Italy); Marie PRUVOST-DELASPRE, Department of Cinema and Audiovisual, New Sorbonne University (France); Jamie TOKUNO, Independent Researcher (USA)

SCIENTIFIC BOARD

Jean-Marie BOUISSOU, International Research Centre, European Training Programme Japan, Sciences Po CERJ (France); Christian GALAN, Centre of Japanese Studies (CEJ), INALCO, Paris (France); Winfred KAMINSKI, formerly Faculty of Media and Media Education (IMM), TH Köln (Germany); Ewa MACHOTKA, Department of Asian, Middle Eastern and Turkish Studies, Stockholm University (Sweden); Paul M. MALONE, Waterloo Centre for German Studies, University of Waterloo (Canada); Nissim OTMAZGIN, Department of Asian Studies, The Hebrew University of Jerusalem (Israel); ŌTSUKA Eiji, The International Research Center for Japanese Studies, Kyōto (Japan); WONG Heung Wah, School of Modern Languages and Literature, The University of Hong Kong (China)

MUTUAL IMAGES

ISSUE 3

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Editorial

MARCO PELLITTERI & MATTEO FABBRETTI (Kōbe University, Japan; School of Modern Languages, Cardiff University, UK) .....1-4

ARTICLES

Telling stories about the “Land of the Rising Sun”:
Contemporary Italian literature re-inventing Japan
FABIO DOMENICO PALUMBO (University of Messina, Italy) .....5-25

Alternative narratives of Japan in contemporary media:
Kobayashi Yoshinori’s Sensōron
ODA TOMOKO (Kōbe University, Japan) .....26-42

“Thinking of Spain in a flat way”:
Visiting Spain and Spanish cultural heritage through contemporary Japanese anime
MANUEL HERNÁNDEZ-PÉREZ (University of Hull, UK) .....43-69

Twice hypervisual: Expanding on North American and Western European critiques of the Visual via Azuma Hiroki’s theory of postmodern hypervisuality
DYLAN HALLINGSTAD O’BRIEN (University of California, San Diego, USA) .....70-91

Interpreting/subverting the database:
Character-conveyed narrative in Japanese visual novel PC games
LUCA PAOLO BRUNO (Leipzig University, Germany) .....92-122

REVIEWS

Media, propaganda and politics in 20th-century Japan – The Asahi Shimbun Company;
Transl. Barak Kushner
JUDIT ERIKA MAGYAR (Waseda University, Japan) .....123-127

A study of Japanese animation as translation: A descriptive analysis of Hayao Miyazaki and other anime dubbed into English – Adachi Reito
JAMIE TOKUNO (Independent Researcher, USA) .....128-133

Editorial

Marco PELLITTERI & Matteo FABBRETTI | Kōbe University, Japan; School of Modern Languages, Cardiff University, UK

HTTPS://DOI.ORG/10.32926/2017.3.PEL.EDITO

Dear readers, students, fellow scholars, welcome to this third instalment of Mutual Images.

This is the output of our fourth yearly international workshop, which our research association organised and held at Aarhus University (Denmark) on 13 and 14 May, 2016.

The common ground of the articles that form this issue is expressed in two notions: fictionality and visuality, applied in this case to the ways Japan and Europe have been narrated in works of fiction and, either realistically or fictionally, represented by graphical/visual means in recent times. The essays hosted hereby explore these thematic areas keeping as their core framework and conceptual mindset a cross-cultural perspective, declining the two guiding concepts under multiple approaches.

As editors of this issue, what we appreciate the most in the way it presents itself to readers is that its articles (1) propose compelling topics, (2) generously delve into theory, (3) provide well researched reviews of the literature, and finally (4) deploy and recount a number of practical examples, thus avoiding the trick of being well informed on something without diving into concrete cases. In this picture are included the two book reviews in the final section, by Judit E. Magyar and Jamie Tokuno: the choice of the analysed works is perfectly suited to the notions of fictionality and visuality we identified as the issue's fil rouge.

What is, in a few words, fictionality?

We can briefly define it as a “quality” or a “property” of fiction as opposed to non-fiction, intending the latter as consisting of factual accounts. One of the ideas behind the Aarhus workshop and, overall, one of the notions supporting this issue, was that a great deal of images that are received and consumed in Europe about Japan are based on fictional narratives rather than factual accounts: novels, video games, manga, animation are all literary genres or entertainment forms (or both, depending on the perspectives one wants to adopt) in which there is no guarantee that what we read/watch is grounded in reality; this includes—and this is our primary interest here—all those instances in which Japan, or the Japanese people, or specific aspects of Japan’s culture and populace are represented. On the contrary, situations, images, and narratives that may even be based on factuality can, and often are as a matter of fact, be totally invented, imaginary. Therefore, what we encounter in these narratives, in their being fictional, is to be framed as fantastic or fantasized representations. Factors such as otherness, exoticism, and Orientalistic attitudes are frequent elements of such fictional interpretations of “Japan” or “Japanese things”.

To this end the first article, by Fabio Domenico Palumbo, looks at the rhetorical devices used in a selected group of recent Italian literary works that show three different representations or “narrative uses” of Japan: Il re dei Giapponesi (‘The king of the Japanese,’ 1949), an unfinished novel by Pier Paolo Pasolini; If on a Winter’s Night a Traveler (1979), Palomar (1983), and Collection of Sand (1984), all novels by Italo Calvino; and Silk (1996), a short novel by Alessandro Baricco.

The second umbrella-notion of this issue, visuality, is, compared to fictionality, a very different “device” of representation. While fictionality, ipso facto, refers to the either written or oral or visual representations of fictional persons, places, and events, visuality can instead refer either to images recorded from reality or to pictures invented, drawn, painted, or in one way or another “fabricated” — let us think of digitally retouched photographs. Images of many kinds and natures are gates through which one can form ideas on places, facts, and concepts that have happened in reality; or means of entertainment if those images, if that visuality, refer to fiction(ality).

It is therefore very problematic, in some instances, to establish whether a visual contribution, a graphical narrative that declares to be showing facts, is actually plausible and reliable. Which is precisely the case study presented in the article of Oda Tomoko on the use of the manga expression form as a means of political communication by Kobayashi Yoshinori, a famous author and pundit manga creator who in his political manga pamphlet Sensōron (1998) carries out a provokingly revisionist discourse on the Japanese military’s involvement in the Nanjing Massacre, which occurred between December 1937 and February 1938. Sensōron, theoretically, is a non-fiction manga, a verbo-visual discussion on a historical topic; however, as the article argues, the rhetorical devices and the selection of information and sources used by Kobayashi as well as the display of images that are not historically grounded make his manga a “suspicious” work, an incisive example of how images can be ambiguous.

Fictionality and visuality intersect in Manuel Hernández-Pérez’s article about the way Spain is depicted in selected examples of Japanese animated works, or anime. His argumentations very effectively spell out the subtle ways by which fantasy and facts can be mixed in order to create narratives that, while mainly framed and appreciated as fictional, give the reader/watcher a strong feeling of plausibility and internal consistency. In the article, for example, we shall find a description of how the artistic crew of an animated series depicted a real Spanish town to tell fictional stories, deploying various tropes associated with Spanish culture, such as bullfighting. Again, we see here the use of fictional/rhetorical devices, this time deployed not by European creators to depict Japan, but the other way around.

The ways fictionality and visuality work as filters through which reality can be framed are also at the centre of Azuma Hiroki’s thought in his own analysis of the otaku’s consumption of visual narratives. Dylan Hallingstad O’Brien therefore proposes an analysis of Azuma’s ideas, namely those expressed in his 2001 book Dōbutsuka suru posutomōdan, and those that have followed it in more recent years, putting an emphasis on the notion of hypervisuality.

The categories of Azuma Hiroki’s work are also deployed in the last article of the issue, by Luca Paolo Bruno, which focuses on visual novels in form of PC games. Bruno proposes an explanation of the devices behind the construction of characters. The article can be somehow framed as complementary to the first essay of the issue, closing an ideal circle because it deals with visual novels that are completely fictional and created by Japanese artists, whereas Palumbo’s article deals with non-visual novels in which the depiction of Japan, by non-Japanese authors, however fictional has a solid grasp in documented reality. Moreover, one of the themes of Bruno’s article is the otaku’s interest in the small non-narratives and in the little details described by Azuma as “database consumption” as opposed to the classic approach to narration, which has its core in a teleological conception of narrative in which the details only serve a larger picture, a meaningful story, and are unworthy per se. It is fascinating, in this context, to see where and how perceptions of fictionality (and, up to a point, of reality) do change among consumers whose consumption style is so new and different.

Before inviting readers to dive into this issue, we would like to make them aware of some useful information related to Mutual Images, both the journal and the association.

1. Next issue will appear in Spring 2018 and will include papers from the international workshop that was held at Nagoya University on 22-23 April, 2017.
2. The issue after that will be published in Autumn 2018 and will collect papers from the international workshop — imminently upcoming while we write these lines — at Aoyama Gakuin University (Tōkyō), 25 November, 2017.
3. One of the guiding intellectual criteria of Mutual Images is scholarly inclusiveness: whilst the journal is a strictly peer-reviewed publication, we consider it a place where young as well as senior scholars can experiment with new ideas and approaches, with some more intellectual freedom than that usually permitted in more institutional journals. Therefore, we invite readers to spread the word and forward information about Mutual Images to their undergraduate and graduate students, post-doc researchers, and colleagues at more advanced stages of their careers.

Enjoy Mutual Images, 3.

Marco PELLITTERI, Main Editor

Matteo FABBRETTI, Member of the Editorial Board